- Subject: This course is designed to introduce students to various forms of mummification and their underlying beliefs and rituals as resulting from specific perceptions of death in world cultures. In addition to the discussion of both ancient and modern customs of body preservation, common perception of mummies as reflected by feature films will be presented.

Requirements: UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS

The final grade will be based on three exams. Exams will consist of different sections (including essay questions) especially designed for the type of material, which will be covered during class meetings. In order to pass these exams it is necessary to attend lectures and to read the required material. Since the amount of information to which students will be exposed is significant, three extra review sessions are planned after the last session before each exam, after the regular class period. The most important information, names, terms, definitions, etc., can be found in the notes prepared by the instructor in order to structure the learning process in the most effective way. At the end of the semester each student will be required to turn in a research paper (10-12 pages plus bibliography) on the topic of mummification, whether ancient or modern.

GRADUATE STUDENTS

In addition to the requirements listed above, graduate students are required to write an additional research paper of ca. 20 pages (plus bibliography). Each topic must be discussed with the instructor first and at the end of the semester each graduate student might be asked to present a brief summary of his or her research to the class.
